LABOUR'S POLITICAL POLICE THREATEN OUR FREEDOM!

Police remove memorial to victims of anti-White racism

But can you imagine them doing the same to a memorial to Stephen Lawrence or Anthony Walker?

No freedom for a REAL opposition party to criticise Government policy

CHAIRMAN of the British National Party, Nick Griffin, and his colleague, Mark Collett, were charged under the Race Relations Act after being critical of the Government's policy on immigration and asylum.

West Yorkshire police detailed a team of officers to spend SIX MONTHS examining secretly filmed video tapes of the two BNP officials speaking at local branch meetings in an effort to gather enough evidence against them for a prosecution.

If the same team of officers had been directed to spend a similar amount of time examining video footage of Islamic bookshops in Leeds and Bradford, they might have been able to avert the London suicide bombings and save the lives of 52 people.

No freedom to question Labour's promotion of homosexuality

POLICE questioned a retired couple after they sent a letter to their local council objecting to what they saw as its pro-gay stance.

Joe Roberts, 73, and his wife Helen, 68, of Fleetwood, Lancashire, wrote to Wyre Council complaining about its promotion of gay issues. The regular churchgoers said the council was "pandering" to minority groups and said they felt discriminated against.

A Lancashire Police spokesman said: "A police officer attended an address in Fleetwood to make further inquiries and to establish whether a 'hate' crime had been committed.

The two pensioners join family campaigner, Lynette Burrows, who was 'lent on' by police after she questioned the Government's policy of allowing homosexuals to adopt children during a radio programme. (See page two).

No freedom to remember the victims of Labour's multi-cultural experiment

ASPECIAL memorial to victims of anti-White racism, which was being held in Birmingham City Centre, was broken up by police and photographs of the victims removed.

The memorial remembered Gavin Hopley, Ashley Hedger, Christopher Yates and other victims of the Government's policy of promoting multi-culturalism. But drawing the British people's attention to the fact that 'racism can cut both ways' is just not tolerated by New Labour's political police force.

Labour turns a blind eye to inter-ethnic clashes

AN expert on race relations says the Labour Government is deliberately covering up racial unrest in Britain, and only draws attention to it when it is perpetrated by the white community and can be branded as racist by the media.

Marian FitzGerald, a senior researcher on race issues for the Home Office for 11 years, said Labour is ignoring the growing evidence of inter-ethnic tension building in UK cities.

Mrs FitzGerald said that racial violence between Blacks and Asians is a taboo subject and that police don't know how to handle it because they are dealing an issue that the Government will not acknowledge is taking place.

BIRMINGHAM: Police don't know how to deal with inter-ethnic violence.

"We know where they are because they are claiming benefits"

THE Government has admitted that it is having severe problems coping with the number of asylum seekers and refugees attempting to settle in Britain.

The Commons all-party public accounts committee heard from Jeremy Oppenheim of the National Asylum Seeker Support Service, who admitted that there was a "severe problem and loss of control" in the asylum system.

BURDEN: Failed asylum seekers shouldn't even be here, let alone cashing in on our benefits system.

But a spokesman reacted angrily when it was claimed that the Home Office didn't know the whereabouts of rejected asylum seekers still living in Britain.

"We know their addresses because they are claiming benefits," he told the accounts committee.

It was also revealed that some foreign countries were deliberately working to frustrate attempts to have failed asylum seekers returned to them.

Qualities that make a good police officer

Honesty, integrity and the ability to uphold the law
Not the colour of their skin

by Derek Adams

MANCHESTER Police's obsession with fast track recruiting and positive discrimination for ethnic minorities is not only prejudicial and unfair, it is also downright dangerous.

In October, a policeman from Bury was charged at Oldham Magistrates Court with five counts of misconduct in a public office and of indecent assault in connection with incidents against two women. PC Shajan Miah, 26, resigned from the Greater Manchester Police two days after he was charged with the offences.

In the same month, another Greater Manchester policeman left the force in disgrace after being convicted of a car insurance scam.

PC Shahid Ahmed, 25, tried to dupe senior colleagues by passing off an invalid motor insurance certificate as genuine. Investigating officers discovered the certificate had a different make of car listed on it, and was made out by a company which had not traded for five years.

Then there was the case of PC

No need for quotas

SENIOR police chiefs' almost manic desperation to recruit members of the ethnic minorities to meet 'quotas' is misplaced, according to the most recent Government figures.

This puts the country's ethnic minority population at 8%, and the numbers of ethnic police within the force at 9.8%, making the current obsession with positive discrimination unnecessary.

Tariq Mahmood who was involved in a hit and run accident in Ashton-Under-Lyne which injured two women and a child. He had no insurance and tried to lie his way out of trouble by saying his girlfriend was driving the car at the time, he even went to the trouble of having the car re-sprayed in order to avoid detection.

Although the officer was found guilty, he was not dismissed from Greater Manchester police, presumably in the interests of maintaining ethnic quotas. Fast tracking recruits from minority communities in order to meet quotas means that applicants are being chosen solely on a racial basis when they should be chosen on qualities more associated with being a police officer - such as honesty, integrity and the ability to obey the very laws they are charged with upholding.

It is a recruitment policy that is discriminatory against White British applicants and demoralising for serving officers of the indigenous population as the policy also extends to promotional opportunities.

For a serving policeman with a good track record to realise that he has been overlooked for promotion merely because there are not enough black or minority Inspectors in the force must be a bitter pill to have to swallow.

It is about time our police force returned to recruiting on merit and scrapped the quota system. After all what good is having a police force with the correct mix of ethnicity if we cannot trust them to do their job with the honesty, integrity and decency we deserve from our police?

Only the British National Party would restore the tradition of recruiting the best candidates for the job regardless of colour.

Rising crime explodes immigration myth

IT IS estimated that up to half of all murders in London are committed by immigrants and it's a similar story in other British cities.

That's according to the political commentator, Patrick O'Flynn, who was covering the launch of Crimestoppers' new website, Britain's Most Wanted, a photographic rogues gallery which starkly illustrated that most of the Most Wanted were not British.

So worried are Scotland Yard by this rise in immigrant crime that they have set up an intelligence unit specifically to tackle crime by people from Pakistan and Bangladesh. Almost immediately the unit published figures showing a 300% increase in murder rates involving South Asians since 1997. There's also talk of something similar being set up to tackle the escalating crime rate amongst the 200,000 Somalis living in Britain. On the doorstep in Barking in Essex during last May's General Election, BNP canvassers reported the majority of voters complaining about the crimes perpetrated by the borough's growing Somali community. But it's not just BNP supporters in Barking who are worried. In Southall in West London, Indian residents have lobbied their MP over Somali youths who carry out the majority of street crime and it's a similar story in south-east London where the West Indian community say they are being targeted by Somalis.

Labour, the Tories and the Liberal Democrats all know about the extent of immigrant crime in Britain but they all choose to stay silent in order not to explode the myth that immigration is a benefit to the country.

Only the BNP has the courage to speak out and call for an end to immigration and for all illegal immigrants to be sent back to the countries they came from.

KRAYS: The time of British gangs and thugs running London's underworld are long gone.

Police admit giving priority to ethnic applicants

AVON and Somerset Police rejected 186 job applications for the 180 posts which they advertised because they came from white men.

Chief Constable Colin Port, said: "The force has a recruitment policy which positively discriminates in favour of people from ethnic minority backgrounds as well as people who are transgender, gay, lesbian and bisexual."

The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) admitted that most forces favour ethnic minority job applications to try to increase 'cultural diversity'.

Homophobic incidents now a 'priority crime'

AFAMILY campaigner has been 'lent on' by police to try to stop her questioning the policy of allowing homosexuals to adopt children.

Lynette Burrows, the author and family campaigner, said she did not believe that homosexuals should be allowed to adopt when she was interviewed on the Victoria Derbyshire show on Radio Five Live.

She said that placing boys with two homosexuals for adoption was as obvious a risk as placing a girl with two heterosexual men who offered themselves as parents.

Within hours of the programme being aired, police contacted Mrs Burrows, who was left shaken by the approach: "They were leaning on me, letting me know that the police had an interest in my views. I think it is sinister and completely unacceptable."

Scotland Yard confirmed that remarks made during the programme were being investigated. A spokesman said: "Homophobic and racist incidents are now priority crimes."

Officers trained in gypsy customs

POLICE in Merseyside are to be trained in gypsy customs to help improve officers' relations with travelling families.

Deputy Chief Constable Jon Murphy, described the training package for officers as "revolutionary".

He said it helped officers understand the "culture and customs of gypsies and travellers to ensure we deliver an efficient, effective and professional service".

Such a gypsy and traveller policy is the first of its kind in the UK.

BNP campaigns to keep a local workforce in Halifax

BRITISH National Party Councillor, Richard Mulhall, has launched a scathing attack on the Halifax-based confectionery factory, Nestle, after he discovered that they were refusing to employ local engineers, electricians and plumbers and opting instead to recruit them from Poland.

"One of my constituents, David Bassett, came to me after he was told that there were no jobs at the factory," the Calderdale Councillor told Freedom.

"He was upset because a neighbour working at Nestle had told him the company were recruiting in Poland. "I made some investigations and found that not only were Nestle signing up Polish workers, they were also arranging flights for them, finding accommodation and providing loans. "This is a scandal, not only because local people are being denied jobs within their own community, but because money earned in Halifax which should be spent in the town supporting Halifax's shops and businesses is being sent back to Poland.

"What is happening here is that a multinational company is using cheap migrant labour to increase its profits. "This means that there is no benefit to the people of Halifax and that is why we shall be exposing this practice." Richard Mulhall, who represents the town's Illingworth ward, plans a campaign to inform the public of what is taking place so as to raise awareness of Nestle's anti-Halifax employment policies.

LETTER: David Bassett is told there is no work with Nestle in Halifax.

CONCERN: BNP Calderdale Councillor, Richard Mulhall, is worried that local jobs are going to economic migrants and that money earned in Halifax, which should be spent in the town, is being sent abroad.

...and battles to keep a home for football and rugby in the town

THE three BNP councillors voted against Calderdale Council's decision to sell the town's home for football and rugby league, the Shay Stadium, to 'the highest bidder.' The Council's decision to sell to a developer came in the wake of the Shay Stadium Trust's (SST) request for a £3 million loan. No council taxpayers' money has been spent on the ground in recent years with the football and rugby clubs left to finance the upgrading of the ground themselves. But now Calderdale Council proposes to sell the stadium despite agreeing in principle to a minimum 35-year lease before the clubs commenced work on the north and south end terraces. The BNP councillors believe it is vital that the town has a true community sports stadium and that is why they voted against the sale and support the efforts of the Shay Stadium Trust. The British National Party's stance was welcome on the football club's website with supporters making their views known. One wrote: "In a town where the needs of the common man and woman are perceived to be consistently neglected, this latest development will produce votes aplenty for the BNP. It's typical of the 'mainstream' parties on this, just the image our town needs - no cinema and no sports stadium. "I can see the headlines," said another: "The BNP supports professional sport in Calderdale. This will win them support. Can you imagine the reaction locally when they compare what has been spent in the St. John's area by the same Council which has created this absolute debacle at the Shay. Powerful stuff, make no mistake." BNP councillor Adrian Marsden came in for a mention in another posting. "I spotted one of our BNP representatives at the Shay and questioned him on the sale. He told me that all his party members were fully behind the Shay Stadium Trust's plans and would continue to support the development as much as they could."

KEEPING WITH TRADITION: Burnley Organiser, David Shapcott, and BNP councillors Len Starr, Patricia Thompson and Barry Birks (right) are joined at the Burnley office by British National Party Chairman, Nick Griffin.

BNP councillors save Christmas in Burnley

THE British National Party's councillors on Burnley Council have ensured that the town will continue to be able to enjoy traditional Christmas and Easter celebrations in the coming years.

Coun. Len Starr and his colleagues proposed the motion which called upon the council:

"Not to repeat the mistakes of other councils in changing the name of Christmas to Winterfest, Christmas lights to winter lights, Easter to Springfest or any other derivatives which attempt to water down our traditional festivals."

Mr Starr told the Burnley Express: "It is important for Burnley people to feel comfortable in the knowledge that their Christian roots are supported by their borough council. Likewise we will make no attempt to interfere with the traditional festivals of other religions as befits the maturity and confidence of a civilised community. "It is essential that the council makes a clear statement on this, so that the people of Burnley know that their cultural heritage is being protected." The motion by the British National Party was to pre-empt any attempt by Labour and the Lib-Dems to try and water down British traditions and 'lose the names' of our Christian celebrations in order to win votes from the town's ethnic minorities.

Burnley BNP attack ward closures

BURNLEY BNP organiser David Shapcott, launched a stinging attack on the town's Labour councillors and MP over the decision to close the intensive care and high dependency units at Burnley General Hospital and send patients to Blackburn. Speaking to a full meeting of the Council, Mr Shapcott said: "Tony Blair is prepared to give away £billions of taxpayers' money to the new EU countries in Eastern Europe, yet his Government can't even fund health care for its own people. Labour politicians in Burnley should be hanging their heads in shame."

Stopping immigration key to dealing with the pension crisis

THANKS to this Labour Government the British people must work until they drop and even then they can't be guaranteed to live out their retirement years with financial security.

New Labour has created Britain's pensions crisis, through Chancellor Gordon Brown stealing billions of pounds every year in extra taxes from pension funds. Home Secretaries Blunkett and Clarke, have made things even worse by allowing unprecedented levels of illegal immigration by millions of spongers who have never paid a penny into our welfare state, but who drain our social services, health and housing budgets.

Britain now faces a pensions crisis because of economic and social mismanagement by a succession of Tory and Labour governments. The British National Party is pledged to ensure that those British people who have made a lifetime of pension and national insurance payments should not lose out because Tony Blair and his new labour cronies are squandering our hard-earned money on people coming to Britain to cash in on our welfare system.

The British National Party will:

- Raise the standard retirement age to sixty-seven, with exceptions, such as nurses and manual workers in a physically demanding profession.
- Help close the skills gap by allowing people who are able and willing to work past retirement age to do so on a special low tax rate, and with their undrawn pension money building up for when they retire.
- Invest in mechanisation so that machines do more of the donkey work in our society. Britain has fallen so far behind in this field that catching up is not only essential, but will also be relatively easy because we can adopt current technology without paying for research.

● Retrain our 'old economy' workers who have been dumped on the long-term sick and early retirement lists as a way of fiddling the unemployment figures. Giving these people back their dignity, self-reliance and pride wouldn't just help solve the pensions crisis, it would also cut the human waste and health tragedies that spring from the plight of working men who are told that they can't work any more.

● Stop the mass immigration that is stretching our social services and health budgets to breaking point.

PENALISED: Despite paying in a life time of contributions, our senior citizens are worse off than newly arrived migrants who have not paid a penny towards the services they utilise.

Inclusive initiative only raises the question of loyalty

THE British Army has received its first Muslim, Buddhist, Hindu and Sikh 'chaplains', in line with a politically correct Government initiative to make the services appear more inclusive. But the move backfired when it was revealed just how unwilling members of the ethnic minorities actually are to fight for what most of them clearly do not regard as their country. An imam will minister to just 305 Muslims, a guru to just 220 Buddhists, a priest to just 230 Hindus, and a priestess to just 90 Sikhs. There are 183,000 Christian soldiers, with 300 padres looking after their spiritual needs. The numbers reveal how little these minorities really identify with our country, beyond the useful formality of its passport. If Muslims were in the Army in proportion even to the (absurdly low) official figure of 1.6 million of them living in Britain, there would be over 5,500 Islamic squaddies, not just 305. In fact, there are certainly more British-born Muslims, with British passports, fighting in the ranks of al Qaeda and the Taliban than in the British Army. This is because they know which side their religion puts them on, and that's an allegiance even the commissioning of a mullah as a chaplain officer in our army won't be able to change.

RISKY STRATEGY: General Michael Walker, Chief of Britain's Armed Forces, appealed for more Muslims to join up during a speech to the Muslim Council of Britain. He promised any new recruits "high quality training!"

Join the Trafalgar Club

Members of the TRAFALGAR CLUB make a real difference to the British National Party. They pledge a minimum of £15 a month, in return for which they are entered into a prize draw every month, receive occasional special internal bulletins, and are entitled to attend the annual club dinner free of charge. In addition every fully paid up first year member receives a TRAFALGAR CLUB tie (or personalised organiser file for ladies). The tie carries the first two 'words' of Nelson's semaphore signal before the Battle of Trafalgar - "England Expects". Second year members receive a fine enamel badge and third year members a specially-designed umbrella. The TRAFALGAR CLUB is always seeking new members. Please telephone 0870 75 76 267 to join and receive your payment card.

AUTONOMOUS: Introducing elements of Sharia law into British society helps form a parallel Islamic nation within Britain.

Infiltration of Sharia law threatens human rights

A REPORT on the growth of Islam in Britain warns that the Muslim community is seeking to infiltrate Sharia, the law which defines Islam, into the British legal system to give the country a distinct Islamist dimension.

The Institute for the Study of Islam and Christianity (ISIC) is worried that this will lead to a dual legal system which would be highly damaging to our traditional legal system. The report says that integrating Sharia precepts into British law would gradually impose elements of Islamic religious law on the British people. This would mean that the human rights of individuals, which are enshrined in our law, would be compromised as an equality of service is not being offered to all customers. Dr Patrick Sookhdeo, the Director of ISIC and author of the report, believes that Muslim communities are actively forming a parallel society within Britain, becoming autonomous and establishing their own "nation within a nation."

Positive discrimination boosts ethnic minority magistrates

FAST TRACK: Ethnic minorities who want to become magistrates are getting a helping hand thanks to a taxpayer-funded Government scheme.

THE GOVERNMENT is ploughing more taxpayers' money into schemes enabling people from ethnic minorities to become magistrates. The Magistrates Shadow Scheme encourages people from ethnic minorities to participate in the delivery of justice and experience the work of a magistrate. One hundred and twenty five ethnic applicants will shadow magistrates for six months in 15 different areas across England and Wales. The scheme has produced 18 magistrates and 50 more have applied to join the magistracy since it started in Bristol and Birmingham in 2001. Simon Woolley, Director of Operation Black Vote which is behind the scheme, believes it is changing the face of the criminal justice system: "Now black men and women are taking their place on the benches dispensing justice and building confidence between Black and other ethnic communities and the courts."

Labour breaks its promise to the six regiments

THE Government went against the wishes of the Scottish people when it decided to amalgamate Scotland's six historic Army Regiments into one single unit.

Now it has reneged on a promise it made to the six regiments that their specific identity could be retained through their distinctive headgear and cap badges, including the Black Watch's famous red hackle on their Tam O' Shanter. The British National Party campaigned against the amalgamation and have made it party policy to restore all six Regiments when in a position to do so.

FACES: What about a Phillips fiver?

Cashing in on 'White Guilt'

A LABOUR Party think-tank has suggested that putting black faces and scenes of black history on Britain's bank notes will help tackle institutional racism.

The Fabian Society want to ditch the current notes which show Sir Edward Elgar, Elizabeth Fry, and Charles Darwin together with scenes of their achievements, and replace them with the likes of Nelson Mandela, Martin Luther King and Mahatma Ghandi. The Fabian Society believes that the symbolism of changing the look of our currency will accentuate the guilt White Britons feel for the Empire and will stop them from speaking out against any further immigration.

Equality and diversity

THE GOVERNMENT has spent more than £100 million of taxpayers' money on 'equality and diversity' schemes since 2001. Recently released figures revealed that the Home Office alone spent £72 million on supporting ethnic minority, lesbian, gay, bisexual and transsexual members of staff.

WOMEN OF BRITAIN Your country needs you

Come and join our winning team

NEARLY HALF of the membership of the British National Party is made up of women and we need that represented in the BNP candidates standing at the local elections on Thursday May 4th.

Women make the best candidates because they render much of the Labour Party's anti-BNP literature, talking about nazis and skinheads, irrelevant to voters. University students, career women, wives, mothers and grandmothers are asked to come forward in the country's hour of need and stand as British National Party candidates in the next round of local elections.

Unchecked immigration, coupled with the high birth-rate amongst ethnic minorities already living in Britain, means that for every day that goes by the influence of the native people of these lands is diminishing.

The British National Party must start gaining significant representation on local authorities if it is to assert more influence on behalf of the British people. We have got to win more and more council seats to show that we are an effective electoral force which commands large swathes of support within the country.

If you are worried about the way our country is heading then please do something about. The then women candidates the BNP can put up on May 4th, the better the chances we have of getting representatives elected.

Women also make excellent councillors as proved by Sharon Wilkinson, who leads the BNP group on Burnley Council, helped by two other lady councillors, Patricia Thompson and Carol Hughes (the BNP's first ever lady councillor). Pat Richardson is the leader of the BNP group on Epping Council and Angela Clarke represents the BNP on Bradford City Council and Keighley Town Council.

If you would like to stand in May then please contact your Regional Organiser, or Regional Nominating Officer as soon as possible. If you are not certain who these officials are then please write together with your CV to: Tony Lecomber, The National Nominating Officer, PO Box 1032, Woodford Green, Essex IG8 9GN.

Freedom's Referendum on Islam - Thursday 4th May 2006

THE British National Party's newspaper, Freedom, has launched its 'May 4th is Referendum Day' campaign in preparation for this year's local council elections.

The purpose of the campaign is to give the public a chance to voice their concern over the growth of Islam in Britain. Freedom editor, Martin Wingfield explains:

"A large section of British people feel threatened by the rapid growth of the Muslim population in Britain but at present have no way of voicing this concern. Our 'May 4th is Referendum Day' campaign gives people that voice. Every vote for the British National Party tells Tony Blair of this groundswell of disquiet."

An A5 black and white leaflet is now online and can be downloaded at £6.00 per 1000. Bulk supplies from: The Secretary, PO Box 158, Deeside, Flintshire CH5 2WW.

A colour A4 poster is also available online for downloading.

May 4th 2006: The campaign starts here

The British National Party is making the local council elections next year a referendum when the British people can voice their concern over the growth of Islam in Britain. Please help the BNP inform the electorate of just how important their vote is on Thursday 4th May by sending a donation. I enclose £ towards the BNP campaign for the 'Referendum on Islam'.

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need and an end to field trials of genetically modified crops.

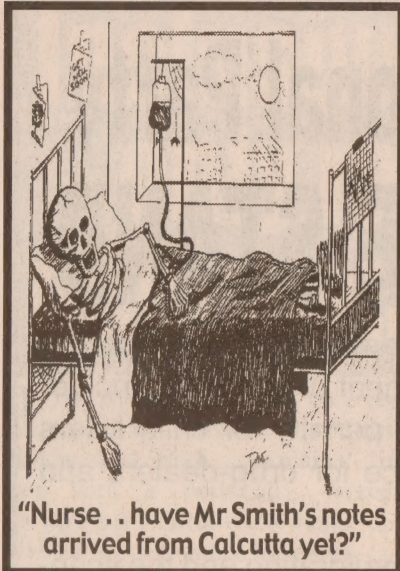

FARMING & FISHING: The regeneration of British farming, with the objective of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food. The restoration of the fishing industry through protection of our traditional fishing grounds.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people

Hospital dumps its medical secretaries for typists in India

MORE than 80 medical secretaries at the Lister Hospital in Stevenage face the sack after NHS bosses decided to outsource their jobs to India.

The East and North Hertfordshire NHS Trust believes that by using workers in India for the hospital's medical transcription service, it can help save money.

The Trust has ignored warnings from other companies that also sent transcription work to India. Almost all reverted back to UK services because the out-sourced work was full of mistakes.

The job of medical secretary involves a lot more than just typing up patients' notes. As with all 'speciality' secretaries, it is knowledge of the specific subject which makes the secretary proficient.

The East and North Hertfordshire NHS Trust denied that the move was just to save money, claiming it would 'increase efficiency'. But a spokesman said that it was of concern to the Trust that "there were racist undertones to the arguments being used by those opposing the jobs shift to India."

Now even hi-tech jobs are being exported

MORE than 150 jobs are to go at a hi-tech fibre-optics plant in south Devon after US-based Bookham Technology announced it was transferring its laser chip business to China.

The redundant workers will join more than 600 colleagues who lost their jobs last year, and the 4,000 who lost their jobs when the plant was previously owned by Canadian firm, Nortel networks.

JOB: Exported from Devon to China
Such hi-tech industries were the ones on which the Government said Britain must build its economic future after the decline in British manufacturing, but now even these jobs are being exported to cheap labour countries.

BNP now left alone to carry the torch for immigration controls and family values

THE BRITISH National Party has been left on its own as the country's only real opposition party prepared to defend our traditional principles against the politically correct agenda that has now been adopted by all three mainstream parties.

The election of David Cameron as Conservative Party leader has ruthlessly silenced the voice of traditional conservatism and has left the people of Britain with all their main political parties singing from the same song sheet.

Tony Blair and Government must be rubbing their hands with glee because they now have the perfect opposition. Even if the Tories or the Liberal Democrats win the next General Election, New Labour's social, cultural, constitutional and economic policies are in safe hands and guaranteed to be continued.

Defending family values and introducing immigration controls were the two Conservative policies that set the party apart from Labour and the Lib-Dems.

Now David Cameron has abandoned this last significant difference from the established liberal consensus, leaving the half of the population that supports the traditional and patriotic way forward without a voice... apart from the British National Party.

The change in direction was heralded by the Tories appointing a lesbian activist as a vice-chairman of the party. Margo James is a millionaire businesswoman who became the first openly lesbian Conservative to stand for Parliament when she fought Holborn and St Pancras at the General Election.

Another vice-chairman's post goes to Sayeeda Warsi, a former race relations adviser who stood in Dewsbury, attempting to become Britain's first Muslim woman MP.

Miss Warsi and Ms James are expected to benefit from an A-list scheme announced by the new Tory leader to put his favoured colleagues in winnable parliamentary seats at the next election.

Within days of David Cameron taking over the reins, the Conservative Party Chairman Francis Maude announced that immigration had been "fantastically good" for Britain. The party then called for the European Union worker registration scheme, which helps limit the number of people coming to Britain from the Eastern European countries, to be scrapped.

David Cameron said the Tories were jettisoning its policy calling for stricter immigration controls and would now welcome those fleeing persecution in their own countries. He told the Daily Mail:

"That means not just letting them in, but taking them to our hearts, feeding, clothing and schooling them".

It was unfortunate timing coming just a week after a policewoman was gunned down on a Bradford street by a gang of Somali asylum seekers.

These dramatic changes within the Conservative Party, all made in such a short space of time, will have a demoralising effect on a large section of the membership. Back in April, the Chairman of a Conservative Association in Yorkshire complained about the BNP putting up a candidate in his constituency.

"You are taking our vote and it's counter productive," he wrote to Freedom:

"Hardly one of our meetings goes by without Enoch Powell being mentioned, and Michael Howard's strong stance on immigration shows the Conservatives know of the dangers facing this country and are prepared to tackle them head on."

In less than six months all this has changed. The Tories are now just like New Labour, a party of professional political careerists who even the torchbearers for the liberal left, the BBC and The Guardian, are happy to talk up as a future Government for this country.

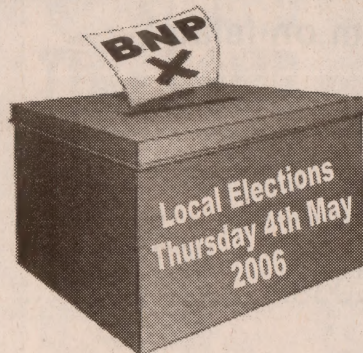

TODAY'S TORIES: Just like Labour, a party of professional political careerists who the liberal left are comfortable talking up as a future Government.

Operation White Vote - Get Registered!

IN May a handful of votes could determine whether or not a British National Party candidate gets elected to a council.

The Labour Party knows that its support comes from the ethnic minorities and that is why it is spending a small fortune on Operation Black Vote to get as many immigrants as possible to register to vote in May. The British National Party needs to do the same and that is why we are launching Operation White Vote to get every native Briton on their electoral register.

Many of our supporters are still not registered and the Electoral Commission estimates that up to 4 million potential voters are not registered.

It is vital for BNP members, supporters and Freedom readers to encourage relatives, friends and work colleagues who support our party to register to vote.

Registration forms can be obtained from local councils or downloaded from www.aboutmyvote.co.uk and you must register by Monday 13th March if you wish to vote in the local elections on May 4th.

Remember it is your vote that could give your local council a British National Party councillor.

Lithuania and East Timor clash in Dungannon

INTER-communal riots have been a depressingly common feature of life in Northern Ireland over past decades but the one that broke out in Dungannon, Co. Tyrone, was something new.

The rival gangs laying into each other with sticks and cudgels and smashing up any car in the vicinity were from the town's new Lithuanian and East Timorese communities.

The rioting broke out between rival bands of immigrants shipped in to provide cheap labour at the town's Moy Park poultry factory.

The Lithuanians were in Dungannon because their country, on the eastern shore of the Baltic Sea, has just joined the European Union. Quite what the East Timorese, from an island between Java and Australia previously ruled by the Portuguese and Indonesians but never by Britain, were doing there is not quite clear.

But what is crystal clear is that it is the local people who suffer from this influx of cheap foreign labour. It's an area that already has one of the highest rates of unemployment anywhere in the British Isles.

Sending 'British' money abroad hurts local communities

BRTAIN is to spend £7.5 billion pounds to reduce the cost and improve efficiency when sending money to Bangladesh from Bangladeshi communities living in Britain.

This money, known as remittances, is earned in Britain but then transferred to family members back in Bangladesh.

The transfer of money out of Britain hurts the areas from where the money was earned. When a factory pays its workforce, the shops and businesses in the community around that factory hope the money is spent locally so that such services can be maintained and the area can thrive.

When a portion of these vital funds is sent overseas it is the local community that suffers.

The Government should be making it harder to send money out of the country not paying to make it easier.

Minorities get job help

TAXPAYERS' money is being used to finance a special scheme to help people from ethnic minorities into employment in Bury in Lancashire.

The 'Routeways to Work in Bury' programme will be based at a work centre at the town's Asian Development Association and will offer daily surgeries to help with CVs, job applications and filling local vacancies. It will also organise job fairs, promote public sector employment opportunities and liaise with personnel managers.

For Bury's White unemployed there's no such Government help, just their place in the dole queue.

Minorities harass asylum seekers

REFUGEE ghettos are being created around the country because the Government is sending asylum seekers to places that already have a large ethnic minority population, a report has said. An independent study commissioned by the Home Office suggested that more refugees should be settled in affluent parts of the country. The study found that asylum seekers were three times more likely to be assaulted in areas with a high ethnic minority population and were also, surprisingly, twice as likely to face racial harassment in such areas.

Anglers in fear from fish thieves

IMMIGRANTS from Eastern Europe are removing vast quantities of fish from our lakes with huge nets and traps that threaten the very future of angling in parts of the country.

One 100-yard net was found on Cambridgeshire's River Ouse and similar nets have been found in other areas across Britain.

Freedom has reported over the last three years the growing incidents of immigrants stealing coarse fish using set lines, but this new revelation of using huge gill nets to increase the catch takes the stealing to new fish-stock threatening levels.

The Environment Agency echoes the concern of anglers with their spokesman, Stephen Gledhill, confirming: "Such incidents are becoming common."

RIVER OUSE: A massive 100-yard gill net was found by anglers.

The Angling Times unearthed a wealth of evidence of fish stealing as part of an investigation into dwindling fish stocks, discovering nationwide concern amongst anglers that little was being done about the problem. Some anglers claimed political correctness was stopping the authorities tackling the crime because immigrants were involved, while others were even too frightened to talk to the newspaper for fear of reprisals from the fish thieves.

1-in-5 babies to mums not born in Britain

NEARLY 640,000 infants were born in England and Wales in 2004 up almost three per cent on the previous year. One in five of them were to mothers not born in Britain, a huge change from one in eight a decade earlier. There were no figures published for the number of ethnic minority births. The number of babies born outside wedlock is also rising, up to 42% last year.

Another unwanted immigrant

Chinese Mitten crab

MOST people know of the havoc caused by the imported grey squirrel to our native red squirrel habitats and the destruction wreaked on our native woodland environments by the imported monkjack deer.

Well now there's another unwanted immigrant. The Chinese mitten crab has been released in our waterways and now threatens our environment.

This latest arrival to our shores doesn't like our strong river currents, so it burrows into the riverbank causing the entire bank to become unstable and collapse into the river.

Another unpleasant trait of the mitten crab is its wholesale slaughter of our native river crab, to such an extent that they have nearly been eradicated from stretches of our south east waterways.

Supermarkets fuel farm price crisis

by Dan McLean

THERE HAVE been reports in recent issues of Freedom on the large supermarket chains who seek to dominate areas, putting small local shops out of business.

However it is not just small businesses who are being squeezed out of existence. The supermarkets are also crippling our farmers.

For the last 30 years the UK has been bombarded with imported beef, lamb, pork and vegetables. This has forced British farmers to give up breeding cattle, sheep and pigs and switch to growing cereals in an effort to stay in business.

Farmers used to be able to grow produce and set their own price for their own goods. These would be sold to supermarkets and local shops at a price on which farmers could make a decent living. But now they are being coerced into contracts for their goods by supermarkets which now tell the farmer what to grow, how much to grow and what price they will pay for these goods.

Back in the 1970's farmers were paid around £100 per ton for cereal crops such as wheat, barley and oats, whilst potatoes were anything between £80 to £200 per ton, depending on the quality and market needs.

Today cereal crops are selling for just under £100 per ton and potatoes in the region of £60 - £150 per ton. This means that farmers haven't seen a rise in produce prices since the 1970's but they still have to try to sustain a viable business.

Over the years farmers have had to struggle with inflated prices and things such as machinery, fuel, chemicals, seed, as well as workers wages have been on the increase, yet the prices paid for their produce have not risen. Meanwhile, supermarket prices have doubled, tripled and quadrupled since the 1970's whilst the farm gate price is stuck in a 30 year time warp. Back in the 1980's the Conservative Government encouraged massive imports of meat and other farm produce which contributed to a surplus of British produce, leading to the butter and grain mountains. To resolve this problem the Tories created set-aside land on each farm, which meant that every farmer had to leave 12% of their land fallow for a year to receive a subsidy.

In those days farmers would have made more money growing crops on this land, rather than receiving payment for doing nothing.

Now New Labour has done away with set-aside but with the current squeeze on farm prices, it is not worth growing more crops.

In my area of East Lothian, farmers have given up growing potatoes, or rearing cattle and sheep to try other ventures, such as selling land for housing or turning their fields into holiday parks or even golf courses.

There is a demand for British produce and yet New Labour allows the large supermarket chains to cripple our farming industry. This policy will lead to there being so little home-grown produce that imported foods will be the major player in our food chain and our rural areas will be in poverty and distress.

Next time you want to buy farm produce, think seriously about where it comes from. Make sure it is British and if in doubt, then go to your local farm shop or farmers' market and support your local growers where quality will be assured and at a realistic price.

Islam targets schools in East London

LABOUR'S education reforms have given faith organisations a 'green light' to set up charitable trusts to run state schools.

This is worrying the teaching profession who believe that extreme religious sects will see this as an opportunity to take control of schools and peddle their fanatical message.

One East London teacher emailed Freedom to voice her concerns:

"In my area faith groups are queuing up to take over the local schools and every group advocates one shade or another of fundamental Islam.

"It's absolute nonsense for the Department for Education to claim that the requirements of 'promoting community cohesion and good race relations' will act as a safeguard. Any teacher or parent daring to speak out against this Islamification of our schools would be branded 'a racist', so everyone is going to stay silent.

"My colleagues and I know that once a school is taken over by one of these religious sects the first people to get their marching orders will be non-Muslim teachers.

£93 million in debt but NHS Trust still funds Asian cookery lessons

THE zero-star Surrey and Sussex Health Trust is £93 million pound in debt and has been forced to close three operating theatres and an entire ward at Crawley Hospital in a desperate attempt to save money.

Yet the Trust is still spending taxpayers' money on providing Asian cookery courses and Asian Ladies' Exercise classes.

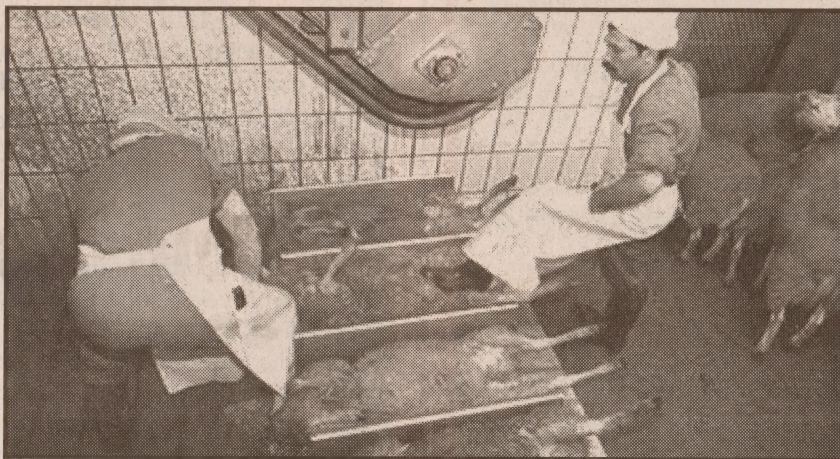

One English patient at the hospital applied to join the cookery course but was told it was open only to Asians. When she complained she was told that the NHS Trust was within its rights because Asians were a special case for preferential treatment due to their increased risk of diabetes and coronary heart disease.

Camden Council puts Islam before animal welfare

PARENTS OF Muslim school-children in Camden in West London were furious when they found out that the halal school dinners being provided by Camden Council were not prepared to the strictest interpretation of the Koran. The council had hoped to appease both Islamic and animal welfare lobbies by using meat that had been ritually slaughtered by a more humane method whereby the animal still has its throat cut while conscious, but had at least been stunned first.

Now any animal welfare interests have been set aside to accommodate the wishes of Camden's Muslim community. Just like any regard for Camden's non-Muslim community was set aside last year when the council secretly introduced halal meat for all school dinners in the borough's schools.

The new set of rules for school dinners, including rights of tender, were drawn up by a panel of senior Camden Muslims and accepted fully by the council. Labour councillor, Janet Guthrie, admitted that school meals had "become an embarrassment to the council", but added "I'm pleased that we are now seem to be getting back on track." - Back on track towards a society dictated by Islamic interests?

When halal meat is used in school dinners it raises the price of each meal by around 15%. This additional cost came to light when BNP councillors in Halifax investigated their council's use of halal meat in school dinners.

There was a festive spirit at the BNP demonstration in support of Nick Griffin and Mark Collett outside Leeds Crown Court just before Christmas. Things will be much more serious for the start of the actual proceedings on Thursday 16th January.

March will be D-Day for 'BNP two' fighting to get their jobs back

AT THE end of March BNP councillor, Arthur Redfearn, will have his employment tribunal hearing in the case of his dismissal from his job with West Yorkshire Transport Services (WYTS).

WYTS claimed that they had sacked the Bradford City councillor on 'health and safety grounds' after it was discovered he was standing for election as a BNP candidate. But now a tribunal will consider whether he was discriminated against and whether WYTS's claim of health and safety reasons was genuinely founded and properly formulated.

Arthur's solicitor, Philip Chapman, said: "This case is important, not just for him but there's a public interest as well. It is about the principle of whether somebody can be penalised in the workplace - in this case losing his job - simply because he has chosen to be a member of a particular political party."

Awaiting the outcome of Arthur's case will be Tina Wingfield, a Primary Care Health Worker from Cumbria. She was suspended from work after a report in a local newspaper linked her with the British National Party.

Tina worked for the North Cumbria NHS Trust in Carlisle as a graduate mental health worker, but a week after the report appeared in the News and Star she was told that she was suspended from her job pending an internal enquiry.

After nearly three months of investigations the Trust said they had found "no evidence of unprofessional behaviour and as a result will not be taking any disciplinary action."

But the Trust went on to say that the post she had been employed in had been discontinued and they were unable to offer her suitable alternative employment.

Tina's appeal against her dismissal has now been put on hold after solicitors for the North Cumbria NHS Trust asked the tribunal to delay proceedings "until the outcome of the Redfearn case."

Craig is Blackpool BNP's Activist of the Year

ON Monday 19th of December, the Blackpool BNP Branch held its usual Christmas social and annual presentation evening.

The event was held at an extremely plush and comfortable hotel on Blackpool's South Promenade, and was a great success with around 70 members and supporters in attendance along with special guest, Burnley BNP councillor Sharon Wilkinson. Sharon, who is also the leader of the BNP group on Burnley Council, gave a fitting speech about how important all activist are to the success of the party. She then went on to conduct the presentation of the annual awards to the branch's leading activists.

The top activist of the year was Craig Hamilton, who was presented with a very impressive engraved hip flask and a certificate of merit. This year's runner up Robert Ewing (who incidentally was last year's winner) was given with a certificate of merit along with Brian Hunter, who took the third place spot.

There were the usual fund raising events which brought in substantial financial rewards for the branch and if the invitation from the hotel's manager to come again soon is anything to go by, the financial arrangements for the evening were certainly mutual.
